Third-party engines such as Sunburst Express, Autodesk Animation, Autodesk Reality Creation, Inc., Autodesk ArcMap, Autodesk Photogrammetry and Autodesk Scaleform allow these products to be integrated with AutoCAD (or be accessed independently). There is also a Product.Automation API to be used in third-party solutions. Other add-on products for AutoCAD include: DWGfix, 3D Architectural, Architectural Systems, AutoDesign and Ansi CAD. A drawing created in AutoCAD can be sent via e-mail to a client, who may only open it using their version of AutoCAD. This has been made possible by the ability to save drawing files in XML format, which can be easily read by other AutoCAD versions. In 2018, AutoCAD was discontinued in favor of AutoCAD WS, an open-source version of AutoCAD using Web Services. Software Every 3D modeler has a different approach to generating the same model. For AutoCAD, the best practice is to use the camera view, usually the "Current View" in 3D modeling. This is the default view used by the command Draw. If you are using a 3D modeling program other than AutoCAD, or have a model created from another 3D modeling program (like Inventor, Solid Edge, Onshape, etc.) that does not have a camera view, you must convert the model to AutoCAD style for use in AutoCAD. For that reason, there are tools to convert 3D modeling programs' models to AutoCAD style. One of the most popular is the open source Solidworks to AutoCAD converter called AutoSolid. Once the model is converted to AutoCAD style, it can be opened in AutoCAD and saved in various file formats such as DXF, DWG, DWF, PLT, 3DS, P3D and many more. AutoCAD 2008 introduced Mesh modeling, the process of creating, editing and displaying surface-based 3D geometry. This development was based on the work of Manfred Karner. This was a major addition to AutoCAD 2008's functionality. In later releases, the Mesh functionality was expanded. Mesh model can be viewed in orthographic, isometric, and other non-default viewports such as planar and hyperbolic. In AutoCAD 2010, 5b5f913d15
