with boost::ieee754? I'm trying to work with the boost::ieee754 library for several hours now. I need to be able to do some complex interpolations in floating point. I know one has to write a custom class to perform these interpolations but I'd prefer not to. So far I've tried writing my own class that implements a simple integer interpolation, but I'd like to try to see if I could use boost::ieee754 for this. So far I've seen two functions: exp(), and exp10(). exp() is the typical log10 function, but it's on a base of 2. And exp10() I'm not sure what it does. I'd like to interpolate between two different floating point numbers, though. How do I go about this? A: I see that you're asking for help with how to use boost::ieee754, in which case you have my sympathies, as the documentation is pretty sparse, and the examples given are so cryptic they don't provide much use at all. Nevertheless, here is some code that works for me: #include #include #include #include #include #include struct ieee754_conv { // from &to are the IEEE 754 floats. template struct apply { typedef float_type type; }; }; template struct idt{}; template
