- Constructor UI - support for compression using deflate (gzip) and LZMA algorithm - support for recursively compressing executable files and subfolders of various systems' formats - Unicode support for string output - support for special encoding in binary files (notably XOR encoding) - support for /etc/passwd - Various ways to select the compression to be used (it could be/couldn't be used with ININ) - two more ways to create/decompress/recompress an archive: the first one is similar to the conventional way and, the second one is similar to the decompression that was used with UPX. - support for entire partition/disk (it contains self compressed or not files). See Note: The final version of this program will have: - optionnal configuration GUI. - optional configuration GUI (similar to DEV_GUI of UPX) - new support for Unicode strings - other minor improvements and bug fixes * Source code is available at [www.vritime.org] (in CVS: main/src)  The location of the executable may vary depending on the OS. Originally posted by vritime Bump 2. I'm currently working on the final version of UPXALL. I'll make available a beta of the program soon. Meanwhile, you can already try it. If you download one of the demos, it will be able to open a compressed archive with UPXALL with the default settings. The version I'm planning to release will have a few improvements and bug fixes. It will have new options to be selected (configuration GUI), support for Unicode (and other new features), new support for XOR encoding and the string table will be more robust. See Note: The final version of this program will have: - optionnal configuration GUI. - optional configuration GUI (similar to DEV_GUI of UPX) - new support for Unicode strings - other minor improvements and bug fixes Thanks for the information. I'll check it out and let you know. Originally posted by vritime Bump 3. I'm currently working on the final version of UPXALL. I'll make available a beta of the program soon. * The compressed file contains internal tables of 8KB size, the method can be changed via a shortcut. * The compressed file has no external tables so it is faster to decompress but the size of the compressed file is bigger than the UPXEXPRESS. * Compresses executables that are not compressed by UPXEXPRESS. It works great with Rails but I haven't tested it with other engines. A: I also find the tool zipr useful for web apps. From its homepage: zipr is a ruby gem that allows you to easily create and send zip files. Usage This tool allow you to create a zip archive and to send it over the internet. (1) Creating an archive Requires ruby (1.8.5 or higher) zipr "archive.zip", "test/", "test2/", "public/javascripts/jquery/jquery.js" Create a zip file (archive.zip) with all files (test/test2/public/javascripts/jquery/jquery.js). (2) Sending the archive Requires ruby (1.8.5 or higher) zipr.archive_to_string("archive.zip") Obtain the content of the archive in a string: "zipr.archive_to_string('archive.zip')" Obtain the URL of the compressed archive: "zipr.archive_to_string('archive.zip')" A: zip_source.rb is also a nice open source Ruby lib to zip files. Image caption Redford Brown is just one of many high-profile building failures to have happened in West Belfast A man who lost his home in west Belfast when the walls of his community centre collapsed is demanding compensation. Gilleece Stretton, 23, has been told he may be entitled to assistance and that he is one of about 10 residents to have received it. He said: "We are all of that generation. Who has never fallen through a wall?" His partner, Wendy, was in the house when the walls of the Redford Brown Social Club and Community Centre caved in. "Wendy was gone when it fell apart," said Mr Stretton. "One went up to the house, one came down through the lobby, it broke through the second 09e8f5149f
