Louisiana is The the most corrupt state in the United States - and residents have a new president who is working to make things right. Joe Delaney is following in the footsteps of Barack Obama, whose work to reform the states began in the aftermath of Hurricane Katrina in 2005. Joe, a former federal prosecutor turned politician, is now Louisiana's Attorney General and has been opening up the state's corruption for years. His office is a bustling hub of investigation and policy. One day last month, the state's top prosecutor was wearing sneakers and weighing in on the NFL. But it was no idle musing. He had just met with the NFL's officials to discuss a team in New Orleans called the Saints. The league has been criticised in the past for its handling of the incidents of on-field violence. But on this particular day, LSU fired its head coach, Steve Kragthorpe, in response to the recent domestic abuse arrests of players. Mr Delaney told me that they had been in the offices of the team's owner for a good hour, "just chatting about some of the issues". Outside the organisation, he is one of the leading voices in the fight against corruption in the state. What he has done so far is to launch a website called Busted in Louisiana, which allows the public to send in tips about corruption. He started out doing this before Mr Obama was elected and when the only thing that mattered to him was politics - as a candidate for Congress for 17 years. He also prosecuted the cases of many of the current crop of state-level politicians, including his own boss, now Louisiana's governor, John Bel Edwards. These are the people who are in charge of the things that really matter to people, like schools, prisons, roads and you - and Joe wants you to know about them. Image copyright Reuters Image caption Joe Delaney was a federal prosecutor in New Orleans before entering Louisiana politics So it is no surprise to find the Attorney General at a Martin Luther King Day celebration, which is part of the state's black history month. Inside the tent is the man himself - Joe Delaney. He is explaining the latest detail of the state's child protection system - how it works, its successes and failings, and how to set it up properly for the future. Joe tries to strike a balance of being accessible and keeping you informed about
