Even with a discount for volume. I love my work and would never charge more than my worth. This is all about getting the job done. So, no, I do not give percentages or discounts. I believe in charging what you are worth. If you do quality work and are trustworthy then you should get paid a decent wage. If you believe in getting paid what you are worth, then you should be quoted before you start the project. The amount of hours it will take to get the project done should be factored in too as some projects are just a straight out take or easy ones. I believe in charging what you are worth. The words are so beautiful when you think about it like that... I really need to move that job up to the next level. I feel I am worth it. I have no issue charging what I am worth. I think I am in a good place with charging by the hour. My rates are on my profile. With my experience, I should be charging anywhere between $125-$150 for a 10-15 minute appointment time. I know some people might feel that that is too low, but it's my understanding that you aren't supposed to charge hourly. I don't understand why we are supposed to feel comfortable charging

Purchasing a home is an exciting and important decision, but it's also something to be taken seriously. One of the first questions you may be asked is whether you plan to purchase a house or rent. While you may be tempted to just settle on the first choice that comes your way, let's briefly discuss the pros and cons of renting vs. buying. Renting When buying a house, you will eventually own that property. However, in the interim, you'll be renting it and, in most cases, you'll also be paying rent. When you're renting, the landlord owns the property. On the other hand, when you rent, you don't own the property. Rather, you become a tenant, or a renter of the property. Pros When you purchase a house, you benefit financially if you are able to sell it in the future. When you own a home, you may gain equity as a result of a down payment. Owning a home may be a great opportunity to get into the real estate market, and even if you can't afford to own a home, you may simply appreciate the unique benefits the home provides. Cons While you may benefit financially if you purchase a home, you may lose money if
