By using a simple system that gets.Database queries are the most common way to get information from a database. But if you have more than one table in the database, then you will need to write multiple queries to get the desired data. Instead, if you have hundreds or thousands of rows of data, you may be interested in using cursors to access a specific row in your database. A cursor is a pointer to a record in a database table that allows you to step through all of the records. In reality, you can use a cursor to perform operations on a single record or multiple records in one query. How to Set Up a Cursor in SQL Server Here are the steps that you need to take to set up a cursor in SQL Server: Create a table to hold the data that you want to use a cursor for. Start off by creating the table that will hold the data in your cursor. If you are creating the cursor for a cursor table, then you can simply use the auto-created table. To make this easier, you should make the name of the cursor table clear. You can name the
