when you create a new profile member, you will be able to give the profile a name. the default name is the only name the profile will have and is a bit long and cumbersome. by giving a name, you can change the name of the profile member at any time. you can also change the color, layer, and material of the profile. i usually use profile manager for the material change. so how does a dm profile builder extension work? it's actually pretty easy to understand, but there are a lot of details to cover. lets take a look at the three basic components of the extension: the dm profile builder extension, the sketchup plugin, and the profile model created with the extension. the first thing you'll need to do is install the sketchup plugin. this isn't so complicated, but it is a requirement. you can find the dm plugin under the plugin manager under the sketchup menu. go ahead and install it. the second thing you'll need to do is create a profile, using one of the extension's built-in profiles or your own custom profile. the extension contains a set of default profiles, and you can create your own custom profiles if you have a good understanding of the dm profile tools. we'll talk about this a bit more in a minute, but it's a pretty basic process. let's get to the profile creation step. go ahead and open the dm profile builder extension under the sketchup menu. in the settings window, select your profile and choose the name for it. if you have a custom profile, then create it now. if not, you can select one of the default profiles and choose the name for it.

a profile is flexible and can be broken down into parts. a profile cannot be broken. the content of a profile is the profile itself. when you break down a profile into parts, the individual parts become individual components. if this is your first time using the tools, remember to make a profile component if you need to save your work. elevation input is optional in profile builder. if the level of the elevation is exactly on top of the base material, then you can leave it off. if you dont, you can edit the profile members cylinder and use the extrude tool to add a level to the profile member. the toolsets in the toolbar are listed in the order they will be used. you can view an example of the profile builder toolbar in the developer toolbar section of the tutorial. if you use the profile builder toolbar, you may find it easier to turn on the developer toolbar when you first launch. its important to remember the lower the profile, the lower the cost for the profile member. lowering the profile will make the member smaller in size, and the profiles placement point will be higher in the assembly. if you lower the profile, the profile member may be difficult to place or may not work well if it has any extrusions. lets say you would like a profile member to be flush against a wall. you would need to lower the profile member and create an extrusion so it fits perfectly in the wall. if you create the profile member at the base of the wall, the lower the profile member, the lower the cost for the member. if you want to see how a profile member looks in 3d, you can view the profile in 3d in the sketchup previewer. to view the profile in 3d, open the previewer, click on the profile, and then click on the view tab. 5ec8ef588b
