terraria is a great game, however it is not perfect. this loader aims to fix some issues with the game while adding more features. some of the features include: - automatic loading of.tmod files that are not in the current directory - mod files are automatically updated while playing (new versions are automatically downloaded) -.tmod files are automatically renamed to.tmod+mod_n so that they're easier to find -.tmod files in different directories are automatically merged together into one file when loading - updating.tmod files while the game is running (the file will be automatically uploaded) - settings screen that can be accessed during game play - new settings screen for mods that don't currently have a settings screen - more accurate information when mods are playing - more accurate information when mods are not playing - .tmod files that are missing a "primary file" are no longer ignored by the game - console command list with more options - display name with name and game version for each mod (name is displayed in the settings screen) the loader is provided as is, and we take no responsibility whatsoever for anything that would happen if you use it. if you have any issue or are not happy with a feature: either do not use the loader, or help us improving it by taking part in the coding effort and share it back with the community. the code and loader can be considered public domain, so do whatever you want with it as long as it is legal. tmodloader is essentially a mod that provides a way to load your own mods without having to work directly with terraria's source code itself. this means you can easily make mods that are compatible with other people's mods, save yourself the trouble of having to decompile and recompile terraria.exe, and escape from having to understand all of the obscure intricacies of terraria's source code. it is made to work for terraria 1.3+.
